- ✓ Previous Employment Verification.

Get Complete Information. There are many recent cases where employers were found negligent when an employee, hired without a background check, harmed someone or committed a crime. Under the negligent hiring principle, employers who knew or should have known that an employee posed a threat may be liable for damages even if the employee's transgressions were outside the scope of employment.

Get the Facts. According to research, up to 30% of all applicants lie or exaggerate on their resumes. Depending on the industry, between 10% and 30% of applicants have a criminal record they have not told you about.

Prioritize Your Needs. Background checks are most important for jobs involving public contact, work in people's homes, handling finances, providing health care services and where there a high level of responsibility for independent work. For some jobs, periodic background checks are prudent.
